A CLEAN-UP NEEDED

CHURCH leaders have called for stricter control of obscene publications and pictures in Hongkong. It is a timely call. Never has the undraped female form been more blatantly featured in newspapers, colour magazines and cinema advertisements and their display in Hongkong streets is an affront to the public which has gone unchecked too long. Victorian inhibitions about sex have given way today to a shameless exploitation. The moral dangers should be clear to all, but whether Hongkong should follow the extreme measures taken in Singapore is debatable.

The danger of wholesale prohibitions is that they tend to create rackets. Additionally they are difficult to police and as deterrents they are rarely effective. And there is no point having a law on the statute books unless the authorities intend to make it work. But more could be made of the powers possessed under existing ordinances to discourage a practice that is giving the Colony a bad name and Government a reputation for easy tolerance.

FOR offending newspapers, films, imprisonments and even suspensions for repeated breaches are provided. There are also provisions to permit the Police to take action against hawkers who display offensive pictures and against cinemas whose advertisements are unnecessarily lurid or suggestive. But again we would counsel caution against sweeping measures. The clergy's indignation will be shared by many, but what needs to be determined is the best way to approach the problem.

Concern is properly expressed for the Colony's young. The difficulty is that if they want to read dirty comic books, no amount of public libraries are going to keep them from it. Nor is it possible to stop from patronising comic stalls, put away those who encourage them to read this trash, or effectively curtail imports from overseas. There is no simple solution to this problem because as the clergy point out, most hawkers who make a living from peddling questionable literature allow for fines in their budgets. Gaoi sentences might deter to some extent, but there is a danger that in making this kind of recreation risky we may also be making it more appealing to its young supporters.

FOR a start the authorities could illustrate their disapproval by taking action against a few of the most blatant offenders. It is possible that an occasional scare may do more to cut down the display of offensive pictures, the publication of obscene articles and the peddling of dirty comics than a battery of prohibitory laws. The clergy could help by forming a Watch Committee, such as exist in many other countries, which could advise the authorities whom to 'take action against'. The Rev. Cheung Wing-nok's idea to include artists and school teachers is a good one. The co-operation of all church denominations is of course required. If the clergy are anxious to make an early start on this problem, this is how they might take the initiative. And they can be sure of a wide measure of public support.

TROUGH OF LOW PRESSURE MOVES OVER TO CENTRAL CHINA
HK RETURNING TO NORMAL

Damage Is Estimated At Tens Of Millions

By CHINA MAIL REPORTERS

The four-day deluge which has drenched Hongkong with almost 30 inches of rain and claimed 40 lives may be over.

The Royal Observatory reported today that although isolated light showers were likely this afternoon, the trough of low pressure which caused the deluge has moved over central China.

Skies remained overcast but the Colony had short periods of weak sunshine during the morning. There has been no rain since 9 p.m. Landslides and house collapses are still occurring and the Fire Brigade and Police are standing by for new emergency calls.

A Thorough Survey

Damage is estimated at tens of millions of dollars but a reliable estimate is unlikely for months until a thorough survey has been carried out.

It is now established that at least 60 people have died in the recent floods, landslides and house collapses. Another 20 are missing and are presumed dead, while 66 people have been injured, according to the latest official casualty figures.

Nearly 9,300 people, many of them made homeless by floods, landslides and house collapses in the past few days, have been registered for emergency feeding by the Social Welfare Department.

It was announced this morning that 8,262 residents in Kowloon and the New Territories and 1,007 residents on Hongkong Island are receiving this assistance from the social welfare authorities.

The four-day period of rain is the second highest on record. In June, 1889 the Colony had 34.27 inches in a four-day period.

All over the Colony workmen are busy today clearing up the debris left by the deluge.

Peak Tram In Service

Hongkong is slowly returning to normal.

The Peak Tram, knocked out by a landslide on Saturday, resumed services this morning.

Partial train services are running. The railway line near the KCR workshops at Hunghom is still blocked by several boulders. Railway workers are clearing the tracks which will then be realigned and the Railway authorities hope to run a full schedule service on Thursday morning.

At present train services are operating between Yaumati and Lowu.

A survey of agricultural lands suggests that damage may not be so bad as was first feared.

Mr W. J. Blackie, Director of Agriculture, said this morning that damage was considerable, but not as bad as the havoc caused by the 1957 torrential rains.

Four Die In Mountain Torrent

Four people were killed when a mountain torrent, roaring down the hillside, swept a car 500 feet down the slope and flooded a village in Telegraph Bay on the west coast of Hongkong Island at 2.45 p.m. yesterday.

Chai Tai, 53, Manager of Wo Yip Construction Company, was sitting in the back seat of his private car parked at the junction of Bassoon and Victoria Roads, while his son was clearing mud off the hood of the car, when the torrent rushed down upon the car suddenly.

The son escaped but the father was swept 500 feet down the steep slope in his car which was smashed to pieces. Chai died by drowning.

The torrent swept on and flooded out the village in Telegraph Bay, filling a stone house, No. 79, with silt and mud, and killing three occupants. The three were Wang Kit-ying, 45, landlady of the house, Ma Lai-yee, 5, and Ma Wing-chen, 5, daughter and son respectively of a seaman, living in the house.

The Hongkong Telephone Company said this morning that there are still some 5,600 telephones still out of order after the recent heavy rains. However, a spokesman of the company said that they expect to have nearly 3,000 of these repaired by about 3 p.m. today.

Phones Out

The spokesman added that the rest of the lines should be repaired either by this evening, or early tomorrow morning.

He said the telephones were situated mainly in Western District, Wan-chai and Tai Hang. The main difficulty, he explained, was that many of the manholes are flooded, and it is impossible to reach the faults. The Fire Brigade are assisting the Telephone Company in this.

Entombed

Middleboro, Mass., June 15. A hostage, entombed for a week in the trunk of his car, was found alive today while a small army of police searched a swampy wood for his two captors. Yaumati Collapse: 439 Homeless

By CHINA MAIL REPORTER

One man was injured and 439 were made temporarily homeless when the back portion of a house in Pitt Street, Yaumati, Kowloon, collapsed this morning.

Shortly after 5 a.m. the back wall of No. 1 Pitt Street, came down with a bang.

An occupant on the first floor, Leung Sum, 39, was injured when he leapt onto the street below. He was sent to hospital. All other occupants of the house escaped in time.

At 7 a.m. the kitchen at the back of the house collapsed in whole.

Cordoned Off

Police have cordoned off the area and ordered residents of Nos. 1, 3, and 5 to evacuate to avoid further accidents. They, total 400-strong.

Some of the evacuees have gone to the homes of their relatives or friends while majority of them are still in the street.

Nos. 3 and 5 have been shored up with wooden beams. The houses, all four-storey-high, are old wooden structures.

On the ground floor are three shops, a grocery, a furniture store, and a metal workshop. On the other floors are domestic residences.

Olmedo Turns Down Offer

Los Angeles, June 15.

United States Davis Cup star Alex Olmedo has turned down a fifty to one-hundred-thousand-dollar offer to turn professional this November. Jack Kramer, the professional tennis circus leader, announced here today.

Kramer said he made this offer to Olmedo just before the young Peruvian born ace left for Europe.

Olmedo is at present sharpening up his game in the London Lawn Tennis Championships at Queen's Club before he enters as top favourite for the Wimbledon Championships next week.

Kramer indicated that "some-one" had convinced Olmedo he could get $100,000 if he went into the professional ranks along with Pancho Gonzalez, Lew Hoad, Ken Rosewall, and Company.

Kramer insisted he had made his maximum offer, adding that Olmedo might change his mind and pay him a visit in the not too distant future. —AP.

HK-Manila Smuggling Syndicate Exposed

Manila, June 16.

A ranking Philippine customs official has exposed the operation of a big international smuggling syndicate between Manila and Hongkong.

Deputy customs collector at Manila, international airport, Arsenio Agoncillo said the large scale smuggling has been made possible through the alleged connivance of certain crew members and maintenance personnel of a local airline.

The illegal trade in US dollars, treasury checks, Philippine currency and other commodities had amounted to about $400,000 during the last six months. Agoncillo said this smuggling represented 60% of the smuggling made through the airport. —UPI.

He brought $1,500 worth of illegal gold into the country but was detected by customs officers at Dum Dum Airport. —AP.

FLOOD WATER SUBSIDES

Water on Smithfield Road, flooded out due to a burst underground nullah and the downrush of mountain water at the height of the thunderstorm in the past two days, has subsided, said a PWD spokesman this morning.

Work is in progress to remove the silt which has choked up an underdrained stretch of the drainage system.

"We'll have to open up the covert to find out just how long a stretch has been choked up," said the spokesman.

NEW COVER

One may have to build an entirely new cover to replace the old one. The existing one is a pre-war structure. Rather old and can't function properly under extraordinary circumstances.

The covert had burst and opened up the road surface two days ago, causing extensive flooding of several streets nearby including Belcher's and North Streets.

The Police have sandbagged the area and closed it temporarily to the traffic for safety.

LANDSLIPS

A number of minor landslides occurred this morning.

A small landslide was reported from the Ba Yui Street near Wang Shu Street just before 10 a.m. There were no casualties. Some big overhanging rocks have been exposed.

A landslide near Richmond Post Office, TWNS, in the Tuen Mun area, has blocked traffic. There has also been a landslide in the Ng Choi Hang area of the Causeway Bay District.

There was a water main burst behind No. 27, Lytton Road. Repairs were being effected. Another minor landslide occurred in Yau Ma Tei Road near Broadwood Road, Happy Valley. —Reuter.

GOVERNOR'S WIFE CAN'T OPPOSE HEARING

Galveston, June 15. A district judge denied Mrs. Edith K. Long the right to oppose in his court today an attempt by her husband, Louisiana's Governor, to get out of a Texas mental hospital.

Mrs. Blanche Long thinks her husband, 63, needs to stay in the hospital for further treatment. She had him flown to the hospital on May 30, heavily drugged, and according to all accounts, bound to a stretcher.

District Judge L. D. Godard excluded two lawyers she hired from arguing in his courtroom. He said Mrs. Long is not a party to a hearing on Long's petition for a writ of habeas corpus.

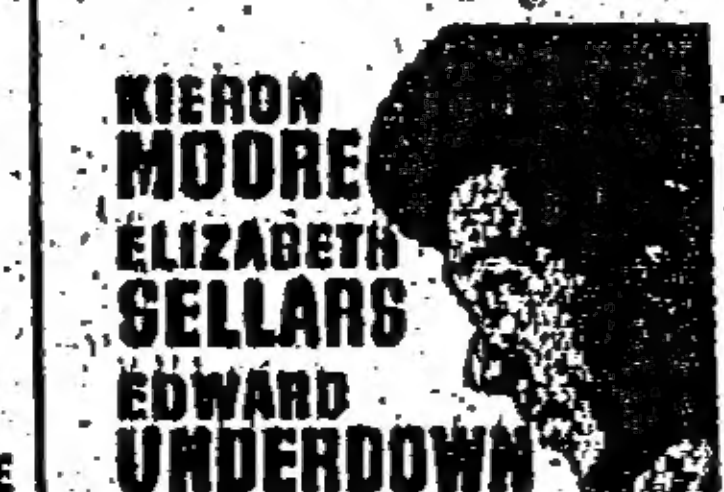

Long who had insisted on helping his lawyers prove his case, "reluctantly" decided not to be his own main witness.

"On advice of counsel, he reluctantly agrees not to testify, but if the Court wants him to, he is ready and willing," Adrian Levy Sr., a lawyer appointed by the Court to represent Long, said.

An attempt by Theodore Stubbs, one of Mrs. Long's lawyers, to get Long to testify anyway provoked Judge Godard's ruling that Mrs. Long has no part in the hearing.—UPI.

Washington, June 15. Highly reliable sources said today that Nato commander General Lauris Norstad will definitely move the 200 US fighter-bombers out of France to Great Britain, West Germany and probably Italy so they can be immediately airborne with atomic weapons in the event of a crisis.

This will be the result of President Charles de Gaulle's demand that France share the responsibility for nuclear weapons stockpiled in France.

Stockpiling

The sources said moving of the planes depends on the availability of airfields outside France and the arrangements that can be made for stockpiling nuclear weapons.

Consequently, they said, the removal of US planes from France may take some time.

Sources said the planes cannot be left in France until a crisis arises because it would take up to eight hours to fly them to airfields in the other countries, to fuel them and to load nuclear weapons.

They understood Norstad is trying not to offend the French, who want them to know the shifts are not reprisals. The official State Department view is that the planes must be kept in a state of constant readiness.

Inter-Related

The sources said so far no progress has been made in trying to find a solution to de Gaulle's demands for nuclear weapons information and for sharing responsibility for nuclear stockpiles in France.

The sources said these two problems are inter-related since they both would require Congressional legislation. If the US Government took a favorable viewpoint on de Gaulle's demands, they said it might take up to a year to pass such legislation.—UPI.

Big Order For Britain

London, June 15. A group of British engineering firms is to design and supply machinery and equipment for a large tyre factory to be built in Rumania, it was announced here tonight.

The contract has been signed and involves expenditure in Britain of over £7½ million. The factory will be capable of producing eight million tyres and tubes a year.

Design Advisory Service Limited will act as consultants to the project.

The engineering firms—members of a consortium—Brylson Ltd., of London; are David Bridge and Company, Crumpton, Parkinson, Lancashire; Dynamic Holdings, Mather and Platt, Francis Shaw and Company, and Simon, Handling Engineers.

The consortium is already engaged in the supply of machinery and equipment for a large tyre factory at Dnepropetrovsk, Russia.—Reuters.

Diogenes Tank Men Violently Seasick

St John's, June 15. Three adventurers, trying to drift to Europe in a converted water tank, were set adrift 100 miles off the Newfoundland coast today by a Portuguese freighter.

The 18-foot tank was towed out from St John's on Saturday to begin the Transatlantic crossing.

After drifting for about five hours, the yellow and black tank, named Diogenes, had made less than five miles progress toward the European coast. The tank was propelled by a light westerly breeze.

WAVED FAREWELL. Richard Mallal, 24, the skipper of the converted tank, and his two crewmen, Albert Barth, 30, and Robert Frantz, also 30, were violently seasick from the tossing of the Diogenes.

When the Dan Gabriel set the tank adrift today the adventurers had recovered sufficiently to wave farewell from the 12 by six-foot wooden deck.

The Transatlantic crossing, which was undertaken simply as an adventure and with the prospect of selling articles and pictures of the voyage was expected to take about 10 weeks.

When last sighted today, the tank was bobbing violently in a light ocean swell.

The Diogenes has three men's supply of drinking water, fish and canned food stacked within the cramped interior, leaving an eight-inch aisle in the centre.—UPI.

Service Chiefs May See Hovercraft

London, June 15. Britain's Service chiefs may see a demonstration of the Saunders-Roe "flying saucer" of the annual amphibious exercise in the Portsmouth area next week.

They have asked for a demonstration following last week's flights of the four oval-shaped Hovercraft at Cowes, Isle of Wight.

But before accepting the invitation Saunders-Roe will decide whether the Hovercraft is ready for what amounts to a sales demonstration to customers.

The decision will be made after a new series of tests this week.—Chilton Mail Special.

A 71-year-old woman refused for three hours today to leave an airliner from Chicago because she thought it should carry her all the way to her destination in Italy.

Employees of two airlines and police argued patiently with the woman, who spoke only Italian, from when the Northwest Airlines DC-7 arrived, until she finally consented to get off.

By that time, Mrs. Carmela Massa, had missed her Alitalia flight to Rome and was taken to a hospital to spend the night at the request of her daughter, Mrs. Theresa Trajkovich, who was reached by telephone in Chicago.

No Daughters

Mrs. Massa, according to Alitalia and Northwest officials, thought she had arrived in Rome when the plane landed here.

She looked for two daughters who were to meet her in Rome, and when she did not see them, she refused to budge.

The Old Lady Wouldn't Budge

Not even two Alitalia employees who had been sent to escort her from the American plane to an Italian airliner could convince Mrs. Massa to move.

It finally took a gentle, Italian-speaking policeman to escort her from the plane.

During the three-hour effort to persuade Mrs. Massa to leave the plane, 54 ground crew men stood patiently by, waiting to clean, service and re-supply the plane for its next scheduled flight. — UPI.

POLICE BULLETS KILL FIVE IN KERALA RIOTS

Trivandrum, Kerala, June 15.
Five people were killed today when police fired at crowds demonstrating against Kerala State's Communist Government.

The shootings brought the death toll in four days of violence to 11.

Units of the Indian Army, reported to have been moved into the state to protect central government property, were on duty in Kerala.

Indian Navy pickets took up positions at all installations in the west coast port of Ernakulam.

About 450 arrests were reported from various points in the state in connection with the Opposition campaign to oust the Government.

The Secretary-General of India's ruling Congress Party, Mr. Sadiq Ali, left New Delhi tonight by air for Trivandrum for an on-the-spot study of the situation in Kerala.

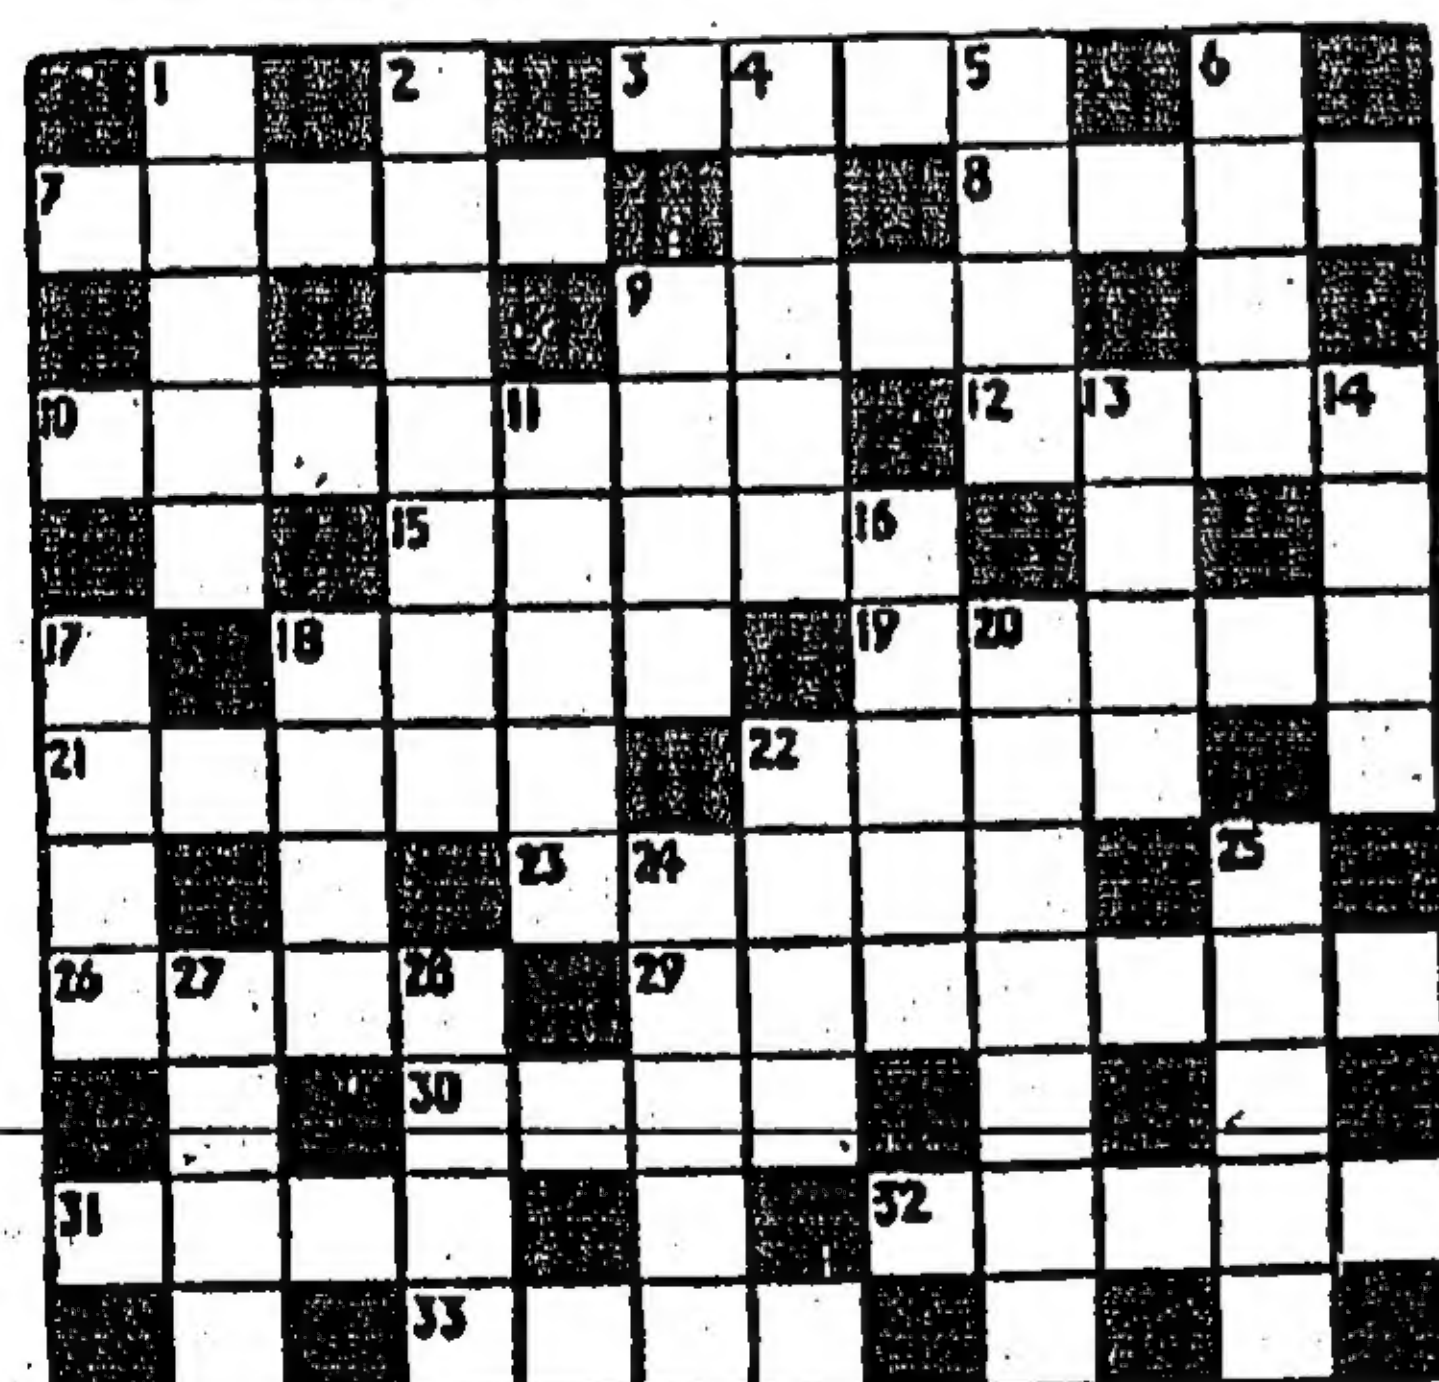

His departure followed "top-level talks on the situation between the Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru, the Home Affairs Minister, Pandit G. B. Pant, and the Congress President, Mrs. Indira Gandhi.

Mrs. Gandhi, in a statement tonight said the situation in Kerala "had rapidly grown worse." — Reuters.

'LIBERACE DANCED FOR ME,' SAYS WRITER

"He Was Preposterous, But Harmless."

London, June 15.

Donald Zec, the Daily Mirror's show business writer, told the High Court today he thought Liberace was "preposterous but amusing."

Zec described a visit to the entertainer's home. He was giving evidence in the libel action Liberace has brought against the Daily Mirror and its columnist Cassandra, William Connor.

Zec said Liberace was at times ludicrous. "When he began to dance for me and carry out these other posturings, I thought it amusing, preposterous but harmless," Zec added that there were only two real pianos in the Liberace home but in one room there were 200 models.

Every conceivable article, ashtrays, cushions, and coffee-tables, was shaped like a piano. It even spread into the bedroom and bathroom.

He thought Liberace a competent pianist and a very pleasant host.

Thanked

At a Cheltenham press conference Liberace was wearing so much jewellery with a piano motif, Zec said, that it was difficult to describe it accurately.

Liberace put his arm round him and thanked him for the article he had written about their Hollywood meeting. He was astonished, because the article had been of a satirical nature.

"To thank me so warmly, if he had read the article suggested he put a much greater value on publicity than he did on his personal feelings," said Zec.

"If he hadn't read the article, it seemed to me to be palpably insincere."

Zec said Liberace was "frankly perfumed" with toilet water when they met.

Women

Women in gaily-coloured summer dresses blocked the pavement outside the court to wait for the arrival of Liberace.

Many had been there since early hour.

Liberace is claiming damages from the Daily Mirror and from William Connor—its columnist Cassandra—in respect of two articles Connor wrote during Liberace's tour of England in 1958.

Perfume

The Mirror's Paris bureau chief, Peter Stephens, testified that he met Liberace in Paris in September 1958.

He said Liberace had been stung by a wasp and went to the airport dispensary for treatment.

Asked whether Liberace's toilet water was noticeable, Stephens replied: "Very. It overpowered the antiseptics." Stephens also said Liberace told him he intended to buy some French perfume.

"The impression I got was that Liberace wanted the perfume for himself," Stephens said.

Freedom

Hugh Cudlipp, editorial director of the Daily Mirror and Sunday Pictorial, said he had known Connor since 1935.

Connor had complete freedom to express his views unless the editor objected.

Connor was not regarded as a circulation-raiser but he was a brilliant writer whom they were pleased to have. A poll of readers some six years ago showed that about 50 per cent of the readers read Cassandra regularly.

Frequently Cassandra's views were opposed to those of the paper, said Mr. Cudlipp.

"That is usual on the progressive and better papers."

Mr. Gilbert Beyfus, QC, (for Liberace) asked Mr. Cudlipp: "The whole of the Daily Mirror when not devoted purely to sensationalism, is devoted to dealing with sex, is it not?"

Cudlipp: I refute that entirely. It is a ridiculous suggestion. It just isn't true.

Cudlipp disagreed that the complaint put forward by defendants, that Liberace made a disrespectful observation with regard to Cassandra Margaret, was utterly insincere and completely dishonest.

Cartoon

Asked if he did not think an American cartoon strip of the Queen, reproduced on the front page of the Sunday Pictorial three weeks ago, was most unpleasant and insulting to Her Majesty, Cudlipp replied that it was unpleasant and insulting to everyone in the country.

He agreed that if the Sunday Pictorial had not published the cartoon it was unlikely anyone in the country would have seen it, unless some other newspaper had published it.

Cudlipp said he did not entirely agree with Cassandra's view of Liberace, but he agreed that he had a right to express them.

The evidence was concluded and after the jury had been released, counsel made submissions as to the form of questions to be left to the jury.

The hearing was adjourned until tomorrow.—China Mail Special.

Space Blasts Blinded Rabbits

Washington, June 15.
Some animals used in U.S. high-altitude nuclear tests suffered partial blindness more than 300 miles away.

This was disclosed today by the Atomic Energy Commission and Defence Department in reporting that high level explosions are more likely to cause eye damage than low-level experiments.

Further details were made public on the high tests carried out with the army Redstone missile from Johnston Island in the Pacific last July and August.

The joint statement said the shorter duration and greater spread of the high-level explosions, due to the absence of atmosphere, increased the brilliant intensity of the sun-like burst and consequent damage to the retina of the eye.

31 Miles Up

Fifty rabbits were placed at distances as great as 300 miles from the ground centre of the explosions—the point directly beneath the blast—and used to determine the effects on the eye.

A spokesman said some of those 300 miles away suffered partial blindness. "Tank"—was set off at more than 100,000 feet, reportedly at the 31-mile level that President Eisenhower has proposed as the upper limit for atmospheric tests.

The other — "Orange" — was conducted at 100,000 feet.

Sooty Terns

The Defence Department told today how a flock of large birds called "sooty terns," which are native to Johnston Island in the Pacific, were saved from getting caught aloft during nuclear tests last summer.

A water spray was thrown over the entire island, and smoke pots were lighted to create a cover of smog.

The birds apparently thought it was storming, and stayed grounded during the tests.

A few birds that were flying before the smoke pots were lighted were "singed" by nuclear heat, but the only casualties were on the ground.

During the excitement of the tests, several birds were trampled to death.—UPI.

Premier Eamon De Valera Bows Out

Dublin, June 15.

Massed bands blared and a roar of "Chief, Chief" echoed through the streets of Dublin tonight when Eamon De Valera bowed out of Ireland's active political life after 40 years as its dominant figure.

The crowd had gathered from all corners of the Republic for "Dev's" last rally as Premier.

Old men from Kerry jostled with young nationalists from Kildare to get closer to the stage from which the American-born leader made his last speech as Premier.

Many of them had fought with De Valera through the years of battle for independence from the British. Most of them wept unashamedly as the end of an era came.

With him on the rostrum were some of his old lieutenants of the "troubled days" including Deputy Premier Sean Lemass who will take over as Fianna Fail party chief and Prime Minister within the next few days.

On Wednesday "Dev" will be a candidate for election as President of Ireland in succession to retiring Sean T. O'Kelly.

To become the next tenant of the Presidential palace, he must beat another resistance hero, bluff Sean McBride. But few forecast anything but a landslide victory for De Valera.

Arena Bombed

However while the farewell was in full swing Irish extremists exploded two bombs today in the Sanny Track and Field Arena.

The blasts destroyed part of the cycling track, a section of the stand and damaged houses nearby.

A huge hole was blown in the new stand.

Minutes later a second explosion tore up the track which had been ready for tonight's international cycling events.

The cycle races were to open a three-day track and field meet at which Ireland's Olympic 1,500 metres champion Ron Delany was to show his prowess.

Roofs of nearby houses were damaged and windows were smashed over a wide area.

The meet is an annual event sponsored by the Amateur Athletic Union, internationally-recognized controlling body for track and field activities in the Republic.

It was believed extremists in sympathy with the ambitions of a rival organisation, the National Amateur and Cycling Association, were responsible for the bombing.—UPI.

OFFICERS' DAUGHTERS KILLED IN SMASH

Singapore, June 16.

Two girls — daughters of British Army officers — were killed and two British soldiers seriously injured when their sports car hit a lamppost early this morning.

One of the girls was identified as Patricia Dodswell, 16, daughter of a captain attached to the King Edward's Own Gurkhas.

The other girl, an 11-year-old, had not been identified by 2 a.m.

One of the injured men was Corporal J. Carden of Eighth Battalion, Royal Army Ordnance Corps, Alexandra Road.

The other man has not been identified. Both have been admitted to the British Military Hospital.

The accident took place shortly before 1 a.m. when they were taking the girls back to their homes at Slim Barracks.

"Both Dead"

The lamppost was uprooted and hung across the 10-foot wide ditch.

The car travelled another 10 yards after the impact and toppled headlong into a manhole drain.

All occupants were thrown across the other side of the ditch onto the grass verge.

First to be at the scene was Warrant Officer C. J. Cammies, General Headquarters, Tanglin.

He said: "I was in my billet when I heard the loud screeching of tyres followed by a bang."

"Both the girls were dead and the men were unconscious," he added.

Ramac Is U.S.'s Top Quiz Kid

San Francisco, June 15.

A five-ton electronic encyclopaedia of facts of American life named Ramac left International Airport today headed for Moscow.

Ramac is an electric computer constructed at the San Jose, California, plant of International Business Machines Corp. and will be a key part of the United States exhibition in Moscow from July 25-September 5.

Placed within Ramac's five million-character memory will be facts and statistics on almost every aspect of life in the United States.

Thus, when a Russian visits the exhibits and asks, for example, a question about American education, the machine will print out the answer in Russian on one of four electric typewriters attached.

Another Ramac was seen by thousands of visitors to the Brussels World Fair last year in the US pavilion.

At Brussels, Ramac was an automatic expert on the history of the world from the birth of Christ to 1958. It answered questions in 12 languages.—UPI.

Peer Admits: I Have A Mongol Child

London, June 15.

A British Lord has revealed to his fellow peers a secret sorrow which is the dread of every mother and father: He has a Mongol child.

Twice-married Lord Grenfell's revelation was something unprecedented in the very formal and august House of Lords.

He said that he did so to urge his colleagues to modernise certain provisions of the mental health bill.

"If I talk about my daughter it is not because of self-pity but merely that my very personal knowledge of this subject might be of assistance to the consideration of the bill," he said.

He explained that one out of every 700 children are born Mongol, mentally retarded and with Mongolian features and that such a child can be born to anybody. He said that his little 12-year-old daughter, can, neither talk, read nor write but that she is extremely lovable.

"Many doctors have advised parents to put a Mongol child in a home immediately, but I believe these children, . . . do far better in their early days within the love of a family than in the rather more impersonal but dedicated atmosphere of a home," he said.

"My daughter went to a special training school last summer and has now moved to a training centre . . . but she comes home for weekends."

He urged the support of training centres, noting that the mental health bill did not make their organisation obligatory.

He appealed to the public not to complain if training centres were set up near their homes and asked industry to employ adult Mongols in simple jobs.

Lord Grenfell has two adult children by a former marriage. His Mongol child was born in 1950 after his marriage to Irene Lillian Cartwright.—UPI.

THESE TREMENDOUS YEARS

If this were really the age of the common man Ernie Bevin would have a claim to be its architect.

Not everyone understood that his prewar association with the International Transport Workers' Union gave him a knowledge of European politics which was a valuable preparation for the Foreign Office.

He was inexpressibly shocked when the German branch of the union disintegrated before the war.

DISPERSED

His international comrades were dispersed—some to concentration camps, others to high places in the Nazi hierarchy.

He did not know which he felt sorer for, but it was this knowledge which stiffened him to put teeth into the prewar Socialist Party, to drive out pacifist Lansbury from the leadership, and to demand rearmament.

Once in the Cafe Bavaria in Geneva, he told me, he was chatting with a French and a German comrade. They were all very merry, and with the best of good humour the German said to the Frenchman: "We will get on well together for a long time, but in seven years we will fight you."

"Bill, that was in 1932," he added, wistfully. "Ernie Bevin was an Empire man, I took a note of these views he gave me one day: 'If you belong to an Empire and see the ships coming and going you are not introspective. But a nation which is contented is always looking home. To keep the peace, destroy the introspectiveness of Germany.'"

But the joy of his life was his work in the war.

Reason for a dinner

AFTER-DINNER speech of admirable honesty and warmth made by Leslie Hale (Socialist, West Oldham):

OCCASION: unexpected dinner given by Hale and Hugh Delargy, MP, to friends.

THE WIT flew with the wine. It was a happy time. But we were wondering what the purpose of it all was. "Let's ask," I said, and inquired of the host.

Leslie Hale replied: "It's like this. Hugh and I were sitting together in the Chamber when I said to Hugh: 'I don't like the faces here.' Hugh replied: 'Neither do I; let's try the Smoke Room.'"

"We went there, and after a while Hugh said to me: 'I don't like the faces here,' and I said: 'Neither do I; let's try the dining-room.'"

"When we had been there for a bit I said to Hugh: 'I don't like the faces here either.' We agreed and sat silent for a bit. Then I said to Hugh: 'For heaven's sake let us have one meal with faces round us that we like.' This is it."

The man of Steel

Who is one of the least unchronicled winners of the war? I would say Sir Andrew Duncan.

At one time, during his Ministry of Supply, work was behind on the cement casemates for the Mulberry Harbours.

The whole idea was top secret. The purpose of the work and its vital importance could not be explained to the men on the job, yet production was lagging.

Sir David Robertson, MP told me that when Sir Andrew visited the sites he transformed the outlook by the sheer candour of his personality.

PLEA
A son of Sir Andrew's was killed in Dunkirk. Much later in the war I thought of recalling the fact in the interests of national effort and common sacrifice.

His secretary, when I checked with him, appealed to me: "Please, please don't mention it. If Sir Andrew sees it in the paper he will go to bed for a week. He cannot bear to be reminded."

This sort of thing was much in my mind when I watched Sir Andrew Duncan rise in the Commons to oppose the Socialist Government's Bill nationalising iron and steel in November 1946.

The debate lasted several days. On the first day I gave a full account of the Socialist case. I said no reason to repeat it all next day when Sir Andrew followed another Government speaker to make one of the half dozen most impressive speeches I ever heard in the House.

He knew more about steel than all the Socialist Ministers put together, with the Tory ex-Ministers thrown in. I think the effort undermined him. He never spoke again, and lived only two or three years longer.

Churchill and the death of Hitler

When the news of Hitler's death came through I wrote some doggerel (as well never) about a diseased bit Hugh said to me: 'I don't scampering through the ruined sewers of Berlin. It would be interesting to know the reaction of famous people the day that Hitler died. And if anyone thinks of making a symposium on this subject I can give him a beginning.

NO TOAST

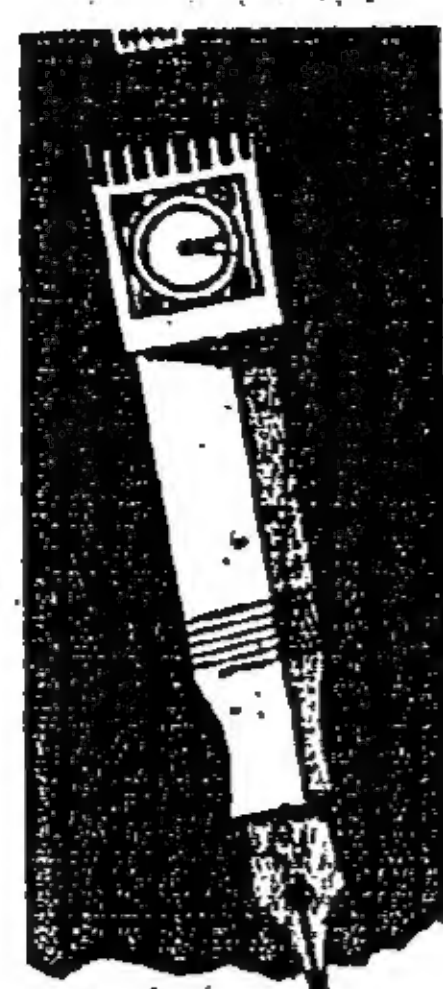

Ralph Asheton (Lord Clitheroe) was at Chequers and at dinner with the Prime Minister when the word arrived. He told me that someone raised his glass and said: "Here's to Hitler."

Churchill said angrily: "We do not drink toasts to the dead." He pushed back his chair and fell into a reverie for a few moments. Then he said: "I suppose they will say of me that the biggest thing I did was to sack 5,000 officers in Cairo."

Did I make the Mikardo?

At the 1945 election someone sent me an official Socialist Party leaflet, advertising the Reading candidate, Ian Mikardo.

William Barkley's Personal Notebook Part Three

The curious feature of this leaflet was that the printer had left out the letter "r."

Mikardo looks not unlike what one imagines a Japanese Emperor should look like. So I wrote that the Socialist candidate was none other than the Mikardo!

Mikardo told a friend that this story put him on the map. Even that moment his meetings were crowded and he thanked me for making him an MP.

Previously Mikardo had not been widely known, but he played a very important part at the party conference in 1944.

He moved a resolution that the party programme for the General Election should include the nationalisation of coal, railways, gas, and electricity, and, of course, the Bank.

Both Attlee and Morrison argued strenuously in favour of a free hand, but the resolution was carried and became party policy.

The Socialist Government nationalised these services, and if Mikardo made them do it, and if I made Mikardo—what a heavy burden lies on me!

Detection is not so elementary now, Watson

POLICE WAGE SCIENTIFIC WAR AGAINST CRIME

SHERLOCK Holmes carefully refilled his pipe before answering Dr Watson. "My dear fellow," he said, "I suspected Lady Ware from the very beginning."

"We deduced, if you remember, that the blow had been struck by a left-handed person, about five feet two inches tall and lacking in strength."

"That description fitted only Lady Ware and I had only to discover her motives to solve the case. You see, my dear Watson, it was really elementary."

This year is the centenary of the birth of Sherlock Holmes' creator, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, the pioneer of scientific crime fiction.

THE deerstalker, the curved pipe, the tweeds, the cape and the microscope are associated with the age of the hansom cab and murder by gaslight. But one wonders what Sherlock Holmes would think of modern-day detection.

Might not even this prince among detectives boggle a little at the scientific war against crime being waged around the capitals of the world?

TED HART

Scrapings from Chesney's fingernails showed traces of blood and minute pink frayed wool identical to the fibres of his wife's cardigan.

And to add the final touch, hairs from Chesney's head were found on the slippers of Mrs Menzies and the cardigan of his wife.

Great Triumph

Chesney committed suicide before he could be brought to trial, but the case is considered one of the great triumphs of scientific detection.

Fingerprints and footprints, although a basic part of detection, are by no means the only types of prints which have assisted a murderer's guilt.

Alibi Prepared

Chesney, who was living in Germany at the time, planned to visit Britain under an assumed name, kill his wife and return to Germany where his alibi had already been prepared.

Despite having to also murder his wife's companion—a Mrs Menzies—he returned safely to Germany. Suspicion fell upon him, but there was no direct proof. Ten years earlier, he would probably have been safe from the clutches of the law.

Under the new scientific methods, however, his clothes were examined. This is what detectives found:

1. Head hairs identical to those of Mrs Menzies.
2. Dog hairs identical to those of the dogs in the murder house.
3. Blue and pink fibres similar to the blue and pink fibres of Mrs Menzies' head scarf.
4. A small tuft of wool similar to the wool of Mrs Menzies' cardigan.

stick—a different stick for each nail—and examine his clothes for blood-stains.

If any sample of blood is found, he is immediately asked to account for it in the hope that he will panic and suggest it is either his own blood or the blood of an animal—statements which can now be very easily checked.

But the one advance the Yard would most like to make concerns the identification of poisons. After a poisoning, it is commonplace to read that the Yard expect to be able to identify it within 48 hours. In fact, it takes normally around 21 days to identify the lesser-known poisons.

But as scientific detection improves, so grows the ingenuity of the big-time criminal.

The Federated Bureau of Investigation in Washington is currently trying to find an alternative method of identification to fingerprinting.

Give-Away Ears?

For many American criminals have deliberately burnt away the tips of their fingers with acid. Dillinger was the first to attempt this and Bugs Moran, the lieutenant of Al Capone, followed his example.

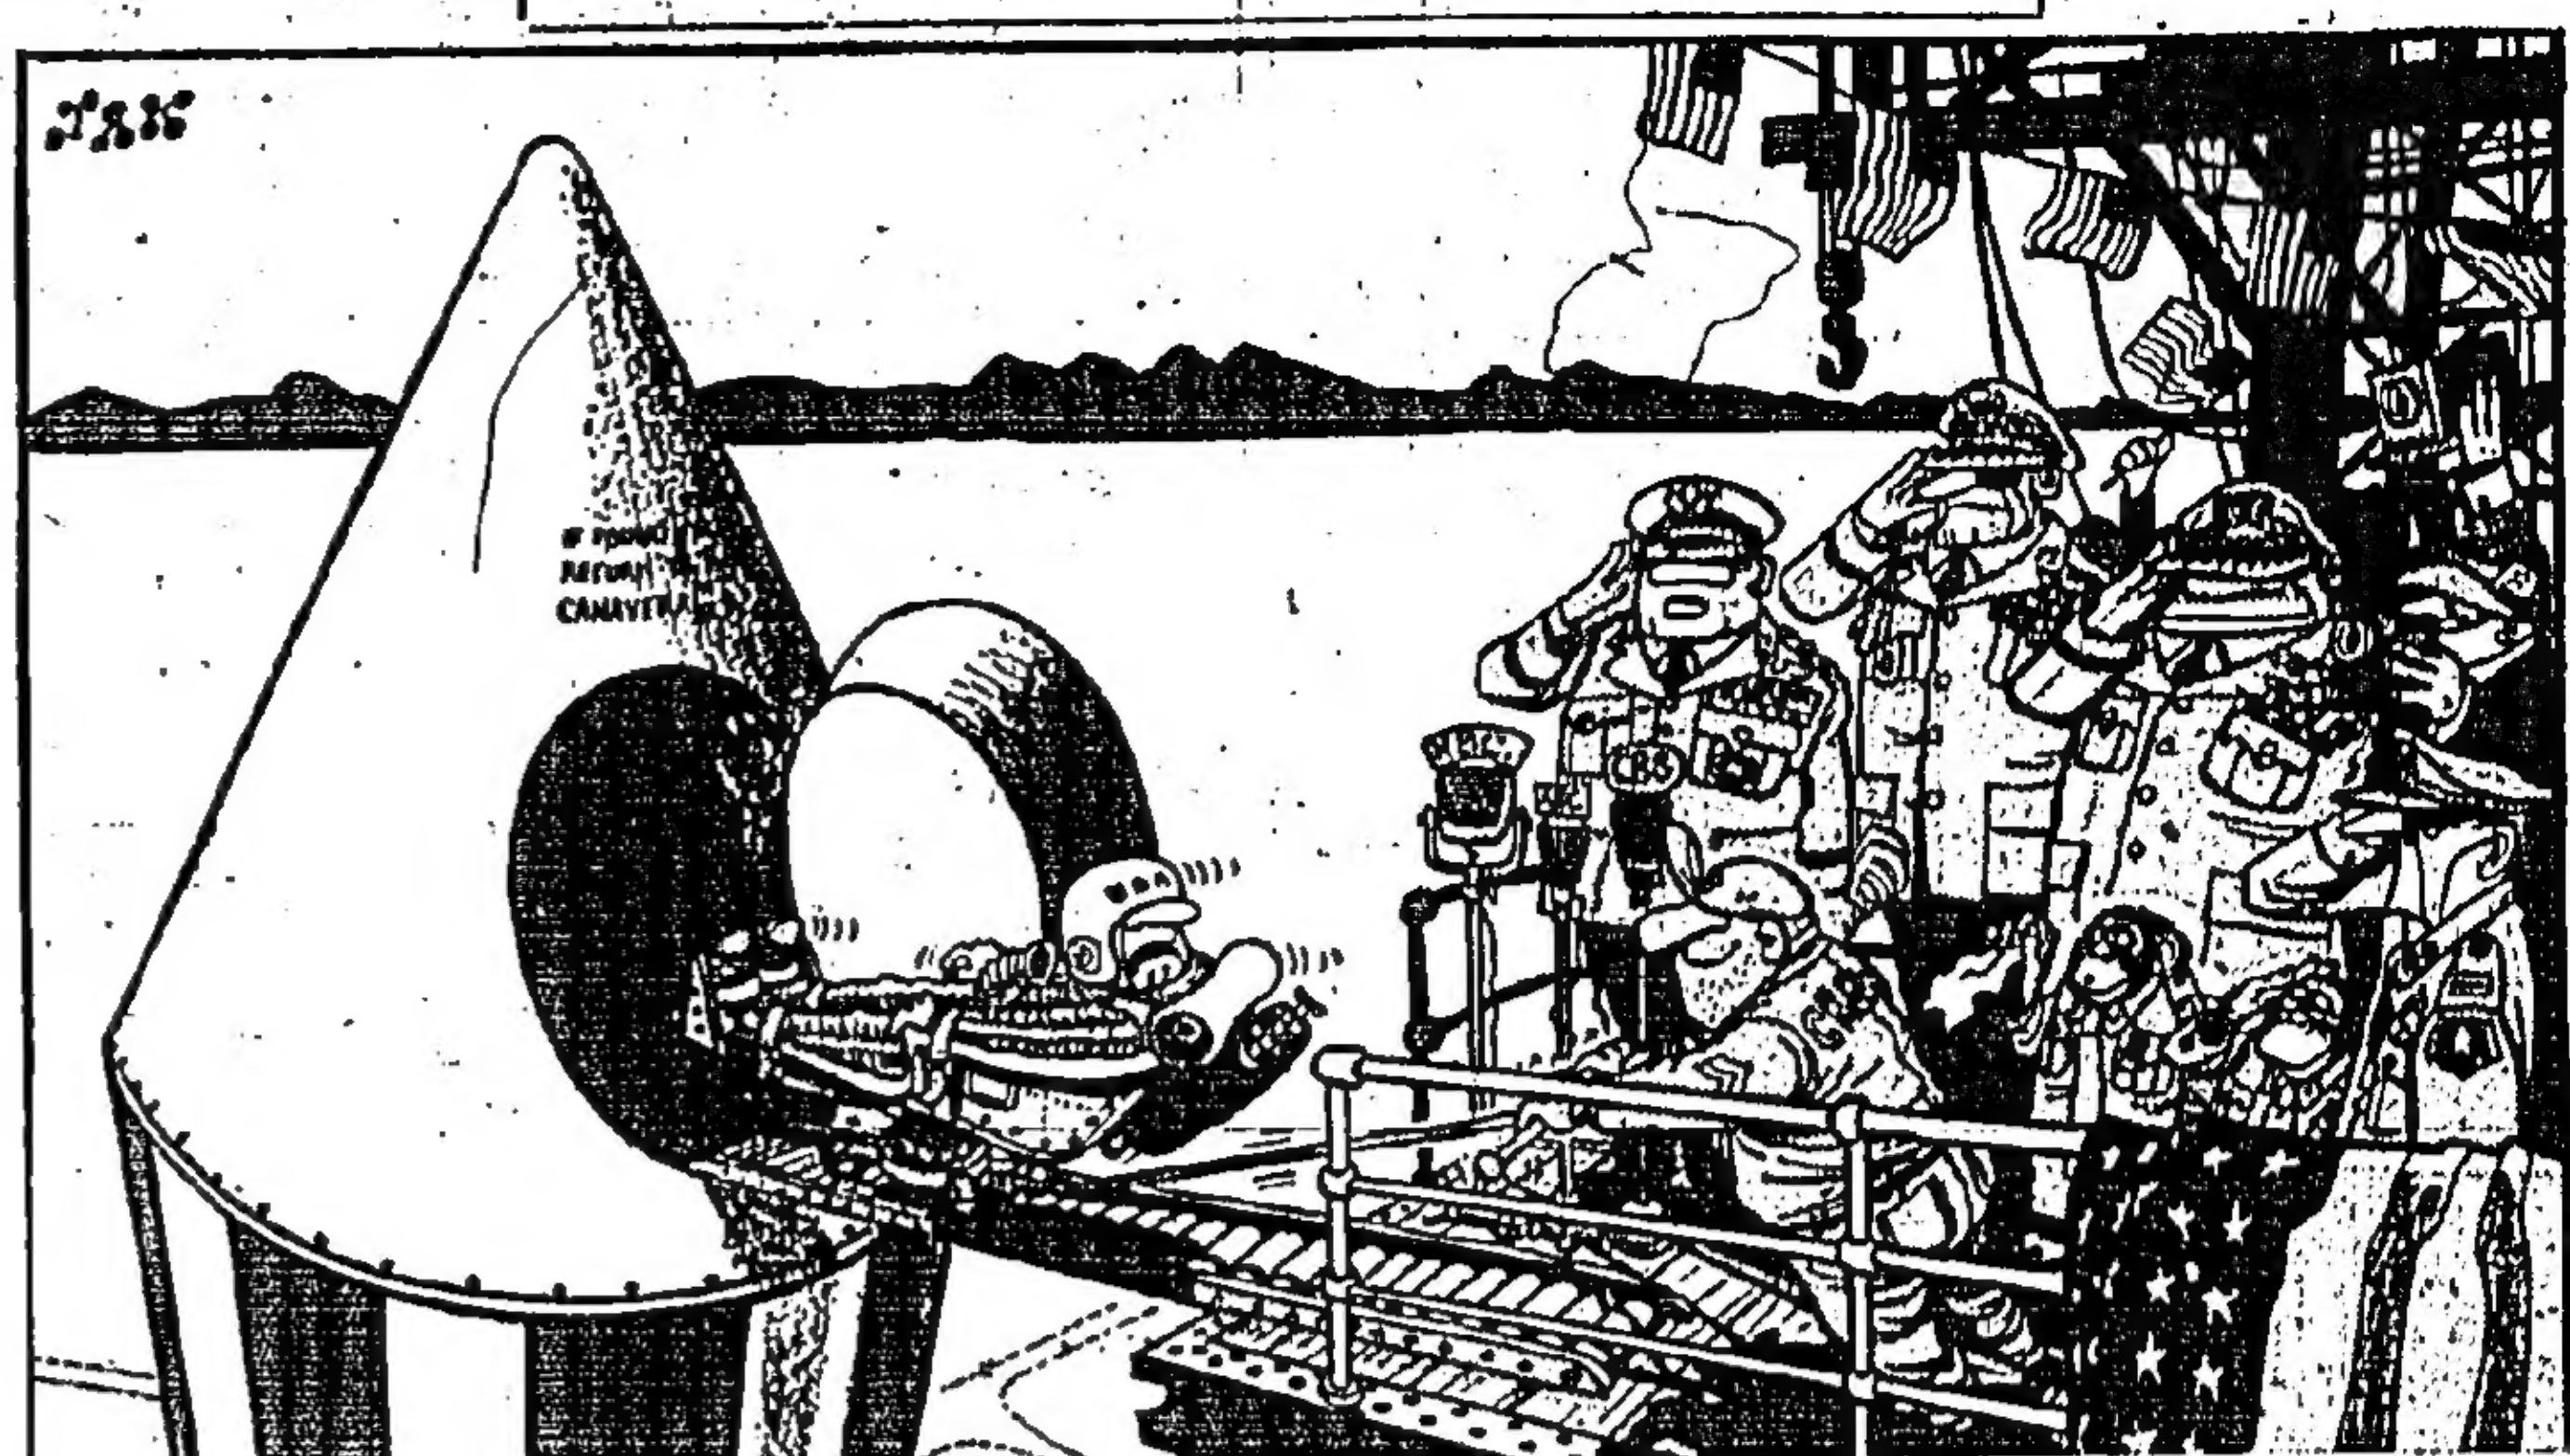

It has actually been suggested that identification of men with prison records should be made with ears as well as fingerprints. No pair of ears apparently is exactly the same.

American safe-breakers, too, are experimenting. Instead of the normal safe ballast which cannot be removed from their clothes, they are using a new type believed to be undetectable. But possibly the most surprising innovation is the use of the ballpoint pen by forgers in the United States. Unlike normal ink, the liquid in these pens cannot be dated.

There is no way by which a scientist can discover whether a signature is one day old or twenty years.

As the great Holmes would say: "It's really elementary..." (All Rights Reserved).

The Channel tunnel —this time it's no day-dream

DOVER.
AN odd-looking ship moves slowly up and down at her moorings three miles off-shore. Near the bows a timber platform juts out over the Channel's grey-green waves.

As the engine pounds rhythmically a massive drill reaches down from the platform to the seabed, boring deeper and deeper into the rock beneath the water.

Engineer Ewen Mackay packs away, ready for the laboratory, the samples of chalk and clay which the apparatus hoists to the deck.

A hazard

"We have to fill up each bore-hole with a ton and a half of concrete when we've finished," he says. "Otherwise the holes would be a hazard when they start to build the Channel tunnel under here."

Yes, once again, the idea of a Channel tunnel has come to life. And this time, it suggests it should not be written off too quickly as an empty fancy.

This ship's task is part of an elaborate survey of the Straits by the tunnel's backers. They are spending £240,000 on probing the project, and this is not the sort of money financiers habitually pay out for day-dreams.

Optimism

Here aboard the Jan Salvor III, as in the City offices where the plans are made, there is an air of optimism—excitement, even.

Already, they say, the study of the seabed suggests that making the tunnel would be simply a straight forward engineering job on a giant scale.

Even the likely form of the tunnel is now becoming clear. This, they tell me, is how it will most probably be built and operated.

It will burrow through the hard grey chalk which reaches across the Straits to France. With its approaches at either end, it will be at least 30 miles long.

It will most probably be not one tunnel but a twin—passage way—one tunnel for each direction—and it will be for rail traffic only.

Running a motor road under the sea, it is reckoned, would bring too many difficulties. Cars would make ventilation too expensive, the traffic would be too slow, and possibly too many motorists would be reluctant to undertake the journey.

So instead, a fast service of car transporter trains is envisaged. Such trains are already used on the Continent, with huge double-decker trucks linked to carry 70 or more cars.

There would also, of course, be other trains roaring beneath the Straits, carrying freight and passengers.

Joined forces

That is how the plans go. What has happened to stir all these plans—and this expenditure—on the old dream?

Oddly, it began with Suez. The dispossessed Suez Canal Company and the more-or-less dormant Channel Tunnel Company got together to talk about their futures. By chance, an American group began to look into the tunnel proposition independently at the same time.

They joined forces to form the Channel Tunnel Study Group, a syndicate which now has four members.

Equal share

Each is putting up an equal share of the £240,000 being spent.

The members are: 1.—British. The Channel Tunnel Company (25 per cent of its shares owned by British Transport Commission) plus banking and other interests.

2.—French. France's own tunnel company (controlled by French railways and Rothschild Freres, bankers) plus other organizations including the International Road Federation.

3.—American. A specially-created company, Technical Studies Inc., sponsored by an assortment of financial interests.

4.—International. The Suez Company (44 per cent shares owned by British Government). This syndicate appointed a brilliant French engineer, Rene Molcor, to direct an intensive inquiry into the tunnel, both economic and scientific.

The report is expected by the end of the year, it should give final answers to the questions which generations have puzzled over. Can it be done—and would it pay?

If both answers are "Yes"—what comes next?

First, the approval of the British and French Governments would be sought. It is not thought this would be hard to get. After that will come the crucial question of raising the money.

The money would be raised in the regular way, from the public and from financial interests. The sponsors would look outside Britain, France, and America. They would expect support from most European countries.

It sounds like an awful lot of money. However, the bankers and City men concerned believe the cash would be found.

As it happens, the chairman of the English tunnel company is a banker, Mr Leo D'Eranger.

Confident

"Well, if the investigators do give the green light, how long will it be before the tunnel is in service?" When I discussed this with one of the experts, I said, at a guess, "Perhaps 10 years?" He looked pained. "That is very pessimistic," he said.

There remains the question of whether the British Government, when it came to a decision, would finally veto the whole thing in the interest of defence. One British Government did so, after all, nearly a century ago.

My expert smiled confidently at this possibility. He quoted for me a Commons statement by a Minister of Defence, in which "strategic objections" to a tunnel were brushed aside. And who was the Minister of Defence who took this cheerful view? Mr Harold Macmillan.

One day you want one thing; the next, something else. Unless you can achieve instant results, you are apt to tire of a project and want to go on to something new. The habit of starting things and not finishing them is something you will have to conquer if you are to be successful. You are considered a bookish person, for you will spend a great deal of time reading by yourself. Sometimes you live vicariously in the lives of those about whom you read. Hand That Rocks The Cradle Helping To Put Man On Moon

By PATRICIA WIGGINS

WOMEN may not be driving man to the moon, but a lot certainly are helping in efforts to put him there.

Women scientists and researchers add a feminine touch to programmes sending satellites and rockets aloft to explore the mysteries of space. They are astronomers, biologists, physicists, mathematicians, chemists, draftsmen, physiologists and audiologists—to name a few classifications.

Besides running homes and raising families, these women are charting "road maps" to the moon; designing electronic brains for missiles and rockets; developing foods for space-chamber dining; computing orbits for man-made satellites; analysing cosmic rays and drafting missile parts.

Take Dr. Nancy Roman, a top-flight astronomer whose work starts where "space lets off" at the Naval Research Laboratory. She's as familiar with electromagnetic spectrums as most women are with bobby pins.

Nancy includes among her tasks charting "road maps" to the moon. Working with an 84-foot radio telescope, the largest of its kind in the world, she supplies for persons tracking rockets through space, data to help differentiate man-made projectiles from natural phenomena in the wide open spaces.

MEASURES TEMPERATURES

Inter-service rivalry takes a back seat to science where her work is concerned. One recent customer for one of Nancy's road-maps was the Army, before the launching of Pioneer III.

Nancy also measures temperatures on the moon at different wave lengths to find out what the surface of the moon is like—fairly important if we ever get there.

Or take Women's Air Force Maj. Elizabeth "Betsy" Guild. Stationed as an audiologist at the Wright Air Development Centre's Aeromedical Laboratory, Dayton, O., she has flown more than 100 hours in high-speed jet aircraft, measuring noise levels at supersonic speeds.

Her concern is not only psychological—how noise affects pilots and crews—but practical—how to retain effective radio communication in spite of screaming engine or wind noises. Her work one day may help make that trip to the moon a quieter one for the traveller. Another space woman is Mrs. Helen Hayes, who got into space work via the ocean. Formerly an oceanographer with the Fish and Wildlife Service studying oyster life in Chesapeake Bay, she now keeps a biologist's eye on navy research contractors, experimenting with getting oxygen to future specimens by the same manner that oysters get it: oxygen-producing algae.

SCIENTIFIC ASSISTANT

Scientific assistant to the chief of the Biology Branch of the Office of Naval Research, Mrs. Hayes saw to it that yeast experiment samples went up with the Navy's Vanguard to measure gaseous exchanges during the flight.

Dr. Lillian A. McNally, A.W.A.F. first lieutenant, keeps busy as a chemical engineer at the Air Force missile test site at Edwards Air Force Base, Cal., developing fuels and oxidizers for rocket propellants.

And mathematician Mrs. Marion Cordell Sims, one of a bevy of women at the Ballistic Missile Agency in Huntsville, Ala., cranks out data from one of the most advanced electronic brains concerning the velocity of satellite launching vehicles.

Beatrice Pinkelstein, physiologist and food chemist, is more interested in the men in space machines than in the machines themselves. She's spent the most six years on pioneer nutrition research studies which have resulted in 12 frozen aircraft meals and 10 canned and unfrozen meals designed to keep space and jet travellers well fed.

Also at the Wright Development Centre in Dayton, she works on the premise that variety in meals is even more essential in the confines of a space cabin than in an earth-bound dining room.

WHAT happens when an engagement is broken?

If the announcement has appeared in the newspapers, send a second notice announcing that the engagement has been ended. Then decide what you will do with the ring.

Legally, the girl keeps it. But most etiquette experts agree that it is better taste to return it as well as any other presents from the fiancé.

Should he ask the girl to keep the ring, she wears it on her right hand or has the setting changed. In case of a fiancé's death, an heirloom engagement ring or other piece of heirloom jewellery is returned to his mother. A ring not an heirloom need not be returned.

Rupert and the Truant—34

Vinegar Will Do The Trick

1. Vinegar heated to almost boiling point and then applied with a soft cloth to your furniture, will remove all old polish and bring back the original gloss.
2. An occasional clean "with salt and vinegar will prevent your teapot acquiring a musty smell."
3. Sometimes laundry becomes slightly discoloured from the "blue." A good soak in a weak acid solution made up in the proportions of one teaspoonful of vinegar to every two cups of water before washing will prevent this.
4. To remove marks under the tap in a bath, rub with a little vinegar. If the marks have been there for some time and are stubborn repeat the treatment until they disappear.
5. Paint stains on glass can usually be removed by rubbing vigorously with hot vinegar.
6. A teaspoon of vinegar has the same action with baking soda as cream of tartar and may be used in making scones, cakes and puddings.
7. To remove scorch marks, mix a little oatmeal to a paste with vinegar and rub this gently into the mark with a finger. Leave the material to dry in the sun for a few hours. Lastly, brush off the dried oatmeal.
8. A little vinegar should be added to the water in which red or pink fabrics are to be washed. Also put a little vinegar in the water in which they are dampened before ironing and do not use a very hot iron.
9. Shine on your husband's suit? Then press with a hot iron over a cloth dampened with vinegar.
10. When a pot gets burnt, put some vinegar in it with cold water and allow to boil very slowly for an hour or so. The burn will come off easily.
11. When pans have been used for cooking fish, fill pans with cold water, add vinegar and boil.
12. Deter flies from settling on mirrors and windows by sprinkling vinegar on the washleather to clean.

The Paper Doll Dancers

—Christopher Cricket Strums a Lively Tune for Them—

By MAX TRELL

NO one knew this story except Christopher Cricket. He was the one who told it to Knurr and Hand and Mr. "unch and General Tin, the Tin Soldier, and everyone else who lived in the Playroom.

"It happened last night," Christopher said, as he sat himself down on a stool of thread floor in the middle of the Playroom while his friends gathered around him. "I went up to the attic with my guitar to play a couple of tunes. I know I'd be alone. I didn't want to disturb anybody."

In The Attic

Christopher paused for a moment. Then Hand said: "So you went up to the attic, Christopher. What did you see?" "Well," said Christopher, "I had just started tuning up my guitar, for I had sat myself down on the floor near the broken attic window. But all of a sudden, I saw something fluttering off one of the old, dusty shelves that stand against the dark wall.

"At first," Christopher continued, "I thought it was only a piece of paper. Imagine my surprise to see that it was a beautiful little ballet dancer. She was made of paper, but she had a short, fluffy skirt and golden slippers. The wind from the broken attic window made her spin 'round and 'round on the tips of her toes.

Piece Of Paper

"And the next second," said Christopher, "another piece of paper came fluttering down. It landed right next to the twirling ballet dancer."

"What was this second piece of paper, Christopher?" asked several of the others. "Was it a ballet dancer, too?"

"It was a clown," said Christopher. "I mean it was a dancing clown. He had a big, white, clown suit on. His face was all white. He wore a big, pointed clown hat. Then the wind came in through the window and he went spinning 'round and 'round."

"Oh, they were two paper dolls!" cried Hand. "Yes, that's what they were," said Christopher. "One was Pierrot. He was the clown. The ballet dancer was Pierrette. They told me their names as they went spinning around in the wind from the broken window. They were lovely."

As Christopher played, the wind spun Pierrette around.

"And what did you do?" asked Mr. Punch.

"I played my guitar," replied Christopher, "Pierrot and Pierrette danced to my music. And then, all at once, just as the air started to rise and the first golden gasbears came into the attic, the wind died down and Pierrot and Pierrette fell to the floor."

Leave Them?

"What did you do, Christopher?" asked Today, the Shuffled Bear. "Did you leave them there?"

"I picked them up," said Christopher. "I put them both back carefully on the shelf. And perhaps tonight, if the house is still and the wind is blowing through the broken attic window, I'll go up again with my guitar and play some music while Pierrot and Pierrette dance."

And that was the story that Christopher Cricket told his friends in the playroom.

rice, Spanish style, and heap in the beef pignolia.

Spanish olive oil is used to sauté the beefsteak because it imparts a delicate, delightful flavor to the meat and helps make it more tender. Also, because pure olive oil is unsaturated, it fits into the low-cholesterol diet many doctors are prescribing today.

Before boiling the rice is first cooked in a very little olive oil to give it a rich nutty flavor.

Rice Spanish Style: In a 2-qt. saucepan, add 2 tbs. Spanish olive oil. Slowly stir in 2 c. uncooked rice. Cook-stir ½ min. over low heat or until the rice turns yellow.

Then stir in 4 c. boiling water and 1 tsp. salt. Cover. Bring to a boil. Lower the heat; cook 20 min. more.

Turn off the heat. Let the rice stand covered in the pan another 5 min.

Crisp-aniseed cookies, served with pineapple-orange cup, is a favourite treat in Spain.

Anise Butter Wafers: Into a mixing bowl, stir 2 c. already-sifted enriched flour with 1 c. sugar and ¼ tsp. ground aniseed. Add ¾ c. butter or margarine. Chop in with a pastry blender.

Beat 1 egg. Add 1 tsp. milk and stir into the flour mixture. Mix thoroughly to form a thick dough. Shape into ½ in. balls. Place 2 in. apart on an ungreased cookie sheet. Flatten to 1/16th in. thickness with the bottom of a glass covered with a damp cloth.

Bake 6 to 8 min. in a hot oven, 400°F. or until lightly browned around the edges. Do not over-bake.

Cool. Store in a tightly closed container. Makes 5 doz.

TRICK OF THE CHEF

For special flavour, stir ¼ tsp. crushed cummin seed into Beef Pignolia.

TEST PLAYERS IN PEAK FORM

Double Century By Cowdrey
And 1,000th Wicket By Trueman In County Games

London, June 15. With the second Test against India at Lord's only three days off, England players Colin Cowdrey and Freddie Trueman struck peak form in county cricket today. Cowdrey hammered an unbeaten double century in a Kent run-feast at Blackheath against top-of-the-table Essex. Fast bowler Trueman took five wickets for 51 in helping Yorkshire to skittle out county champions, Surrey, for 87 at the Oval.

'I Am Not Being Fooled' Says Cus D'Amato

New York, June 15. Cus D'Amato, Floyd Patterson's manager, is certain that Ingemar Johansson has been holding intensive training workouts secretly while performing almost casually in public.

Lester Bromberg relates today in the New York World Telegram a conversation he had with D'Amato.

"I am not being fooled," said D'Amato. "I have my agent in the camp. It is not Harry Davidow, it's somebody so close to Johansson all the Swedes will be shocked if they ever learned who he was."

D'Amato said he expects Johansson to deny he had any secret training sessions. "I would," he said, "but Floyd has had secret workouts why shouldn't Johansson? He is a cunning young man."

"Can Johansson deny that Whitely Blumstein, his trainer, keeps calling New York for sparring partners who never shows up at the regular workouts? And his absence from camp? Are they not a cover for boxing somewhere else?"—ARP.

Welsh Soccer Referee Has 10 Years To Fulfil His Ambition

Man with ten years to fulfil an ambition is Welsh soccer referee Leo Gallaghan. That is to officiate at the Wembley Cup Final. He is only 35 years of age, but nevertheless has had long League experience and he has until retirement age in 1970 to reach his goal.

Before then he may have pointed by the retirement of Merwyn Griffiths and been appointed to the World Cup list as a Welsh nomination with Bob Smith and Cliff Kingston. If he made the grade for the 1962 Finals in Chile he would almost certainly get appointed for the 1966 Finals in Britain and the 1970 Finals in Mexico. A fine prospect, and with such a record a Wembley-Final would seem assured.

Despite his Irish sounding name he is a devout Roman Catholic and was named after a Pope—he is very Welsh and from Tredegar. He is dedicated to football and takes his refereeing so seriously that he runs the mountain sheep paths around Merthyr three days a week at the year round.

Proper Vocation
Amazingly, he has never kicked a football professionally and, in fact, went straight into refereeing when he had his first contact with the game with the R.A.F. in Burma jungle. When he was demobilised he realised that in addition to being a jeweller in South Wales he had found his proper vocation, and so he started out as the man in the middle in 1947 in the local league at the age of 24.

A non-smoker and a teetotalist, he believes his lack of active football experience to be an asset for he says it helps him to remain cool in a crisis and survey the rule book impartially. After a year on the Welsh League list he became the youngest Football League referee ever in 1949, and got the Schoolboy International between Scotland and Ireland at Paisley that very season. He served his apprenticeship as a League official and had to wait until 1955 before he got Kent's total of 401 for three was the highest county aggregate for one day's play for a considerable time. Facing an Essex total of 371 they were given a fine start to their bid for first innings lead by Arthur Phoeby who hit 130.

Cowdrey did not go in until after lunch but by tea he had already completed his first hundred. Another century followed between tea and the close by which time he had equalled his previous best score of 204 not out. He hit two sixes and 27 fours in his four hours at the wicket.

1,000th Wicket
It was a fine performance by Cowdrey even though the Essex attack was dogged by muscle injuries to Roy Ralph and Trevor Bailey.

Trueman during his deadly spell of pace bowling claimed the 1,000th wicket of his career. He shared the 10 Surrey second innings wickets with fast medium bowler, Bob Platt, who finished with match figures of 10 for 87. Yorkshire need to make 220 for victory tomorrow.

Two Somerset batsmen, West Indies-born P. B. Wright (102) and Maurice Tremlett (100), helped to put their county well ahead of Middlesex on first innings at Bath.

1,000 Runs
At Dudley, Mike Smith, an England soccer and cricket international, hit 75 off the Worcestershire attack to become the third batsman of the season to reach 1,000 runs. Shortly afterwards, Polly Umrigar of the Indian touring side also achieved the feat at Northampton.

Glamorgan raced to their sixth successive home win when they defeated Gloucestershire at Swansea by 199 runs with a day to spare. Gloucestershire needing 247 to win never looked likely to get the runs on a pitch taking spin. McConnon finished with match figures of 10 for 87 for Glamorgan.

Miller Scores 102
Australia's Keith Miller one of the finest all-rounders in cricket history showed today he has still a quick eye and a flashing bat even after three years' retirement from the first class game.

Miller, who has played serious cricket in 1959 appeared as a guest batsman for Nottinghamshire at the Trent Bridge Test ground against Cambridge University and hit an unbeaten 102 in a belting 125 minutes. This followed his first innings knock of 62—Reuter.

BRUNDAGE SAYS HE WILL NOT RESIGN FROM HIS POST

Lausanne, June 15.

Avery Brundage, President of the International Olympic Committee said today that he will stick to his post despite demands that he resign because of the Committee's controversial decision on Nationalist China.

"The IOC decided on May 28, by an overwhelming majority to strike the name of the Chinese National Olympic Committee from the official list until it accepts a name that does not include the word 'China' because 'it does not control sports in the country of China.'"

Uproar
This decision caused a worldwide uproar and led to widespread demands for the resignation of the 70-year-old Chicago man.

But today he snapped back at his critics and said: "I do not intend to resign. This is definite."

Brundage, whose eight-year term as IOC President expires next year, also took objection to the use of the words "ouster" and "expelled" in connection with the IOC decision on the Tsinan committee.

Returning To U.S.
Brundage, who is leaving tomorrow to return to the United States via Paris and London, added, "Why should I resign, because of complexity in a decision taken by a majority of the committee in accordance with IOC rules?"

According to the official minutes of the May 28 meeting only seven of the 48 delegates present voted against the decision to withdraw recognition of the Formosa committee until it has changed its name. Brundage recently told United States International in an interview that he had not voted because "in very close votes, or in written ballots."—UPI.

Golfer Can Be Right On The Ball With New Plastic
By GEORGE HOGAN

A new plastic so tough it can be used to make cartridge and shell cases is producing a golf club head that is likely to give a distinct advantage to its owner.

Normal wooden heads absorb moisture and are, therefore, liable to distortion. Even when this is very slight indeed, the smallest error can still be magnified disastrously in a drive of, say, 200 yards. A golfer who feels he is unaccountably "off his game" may really be the victim of a damp atmosphere.

The new plastic club head avoids the effects of this. It cannot become distorted. It is entirely moisture proof and more durable than wood. It is one of many new developments on view at the International Plastic Exhibition at Olympia, London, from June 17 to 27—the shop window of an industry with an annual output, in Britain alone, of over £100,000,000.

Progress
The first plastic, celluloid, was produced about 100 years ago, but only in the last 20 years has real progress been made. Recent developments have been rapid and an incredible number of articles are now being made from many types of plastic.

At Olympia some 300 firms, including 50 from overseas, will be showing their products, which range from pit prop caps for coal mines, through furniture, flooring, wall coverings, toys, kitchen appliances, radiators, refrigerators, paint, pipe-lines and gramophone records to window curtaining.

Ailing Yankees Not Likely To Get New Blood As Time Limit For Player Trades Ends

New York, June 15.

Midnight (New York time) is the limit for player trades among Major League clubs and it looks very much as if the New York Yankees, ailing in several positions, will not be able to get any new blood. Following the double defeat by the Detroit Tigers on Sunday, rumours persisted that the Yankees would endeavor to make a trade, but a few hours before the deadline it appeared very unlikely.

Woefully Weak
Most experts are agreed that with Hank Bauer, Gil McDougall and Andy Carey out of action with various and sundry ailments, the Yankees are woefully weak in the bench and Casey has been forced to use catchers and first basemen in the outfield.

The writers who follow the Yankees the entire season, feel that what the champions need is an inspirational player, a man who can be the sparkplug that ignites the team. They used to say that as Mickey Mantle goes so go the Yankees.

That was true to a certain extent, but the man who seemed to inspire the New Yorkers recently was Hector Lopez. When the young Panamanian was acquired on May 24 from Kansas City, he immediately went on a hitting spree and "inspired" the rest of the team, including Mantle himself.

Another 'Sparkplug'
The result was the Yankees won eight out of ten games on the road from Washington, Detroit and Cleveland.

But then the Tigers invaded Yankee Stadium and took three of the four games they played in the home of the champions, and now Stengel is looking for another "sparkplug." Lopez himself has fallen off in his hitting. The batting streak that zoomed him up to a .310 average, he performed out and now he stands at .239, having gone without a hit in his last 15 times with his batting average.

The Team To Beat

The way it stands now, the White Sox have a half-game edge over the Cleveland Indians and two full games over Detroit in the third place. The closeness of the race is dramatically illustrated by the standings that show only a five game spread between sixth place Kansas City and first place Chicago. Even the lowly Washington Senators in last place are only nine games away from the top.

In the National League, unscathed veteran Eddie Brandt, long-time traveling secretary of the giants, is of the opinion the Pittsburgh Pirates are the team to beat.

Meanwhile, the Detroit Tigers, with Harvey Kuenn and Al Kaline, leading the American League hitters with fat averages of .355 and .357 respectively, are making threatening gestures and travelling fast in the direction of first place.

They are the only two games behind the League-leading White Sox who come into Yankee Stadium on Tuesday night for a four game series that can be termed "crucial" in so far as the Yankees are concerned.

They are a little older," he says, "and maybe they can't win twenty games apiece such as they've done the last two seasons. If they fall, then look out for the Giants and the Pirates."

At the present writing the first five teams in the National League are bunched under a four and a half game spread between first and fifth place. The Braves lead by a game and a half over the Giants, with Pittsburgh in third place 3½ games out. The Pirates won both games of a Sunday doubleheader from Los Angeles, which is in fifth place. The Chicago Cubs hold down the fourth spot, half a game in front of the Dodgers.—AFP.

Rose And Henricks Can Now Represent Australia In Rome

Melbourne, June 15. Australia's Olympic swimming champions Murray Rose and Jon Henricks, now studying at American universities, have had the way opened to them for selection in the Australian team to go to Rome for the Olympic Games next year, the Age swimming correspondent said today.

Moves at the half-yearly conference of the Australian Swimming Union in Melbourne at the weekend had done this, he said.

The stumbling block had been a preliminary selection of the Olympic swimming team to be made in February next year, the Age correspondent said.

But neither Henricks nor Rose, because of their studies in the United States, would be able to be in Sydney for the national trials next February.

This weekend, selectors suggested a preliminary selection of the Olympic swimming team to be made in February next year, the Age correspondent said.

He also proposed that no additions be made, but that swimmers who dropped below their selection standards during final trials in Townsville, North Queensland, should be dropped from the final team.

This meant that Henricks and Rose could miss the national trials in February, be chosen in the preliminary team and return to Australia in time for training and trials at Townsville during their University vacations, he said.

It would then be up to Henricks and Rose to show sufficient form to retain their places.

The Union decided that two coaches should be employed to supervise the team's preliminary training at Townsville.

Training

It also decided that the Townsville training should be of eight weeks' duration. It wants swimmers to start callisthenics and basic swimming training in their own states on April 1 next year and plans to commence the Townsville training immediately before the departure date for Rome.

Conference decided to select 11 water polo players in an Olympic squad early next year and have a training camp for them, probably also in North Queensland.

This is despite the fact that, at present, Australia is excluded from the Olympic water polo competition next year—China Mail Special.

Doctors Want Boxing Abolished

Tips From Olmedo?

MEDICAL JOURNAL OPENS CAMPAIGN FOR BAN ON "THE IGNOBLE ART"

By CHAPMAN FINCHER

A plea to all doctors to campaign for the total abolition of boxing has been made by the Lancet, the world's senior medical journal. Claiming that the boxer's purpose is to damage his opponent's head, eyes, and brain as much as possible, the Lancet urges the doctors to attack the wealthy boxing industry on three fronts:—

★ By warning boxers, head-masters, parents, and boys' club leaders about the dangers of delayed brain injury.

★ By trying to influence mothers through talks on the BBC Woman's Hour.

★ By inducing the British Medical Association, the Royal College of Surgeons, and other medical bodies to press for legislation to ban boxing.

Hundreds...

Pointing out that the boxer's blow, which occasionally kills, is landed deliberately, the Lancet urges the BBC and ITA to take boxing off the TV screens before viewers suffer the spectacle of seeing someone battered to death.

What are the facts behind this high-powered attack? In the last four years 64 boxers, including 22 amateurs, have died as a result of ring injuries throughout the world. The anti-boxing doctors are particularly perturbed by the case of 24-year-old Peter Waterman, former welterweight champion who retired after a defeat by Dave Charlley last year. He has been suffering from arm trouble caused by the rupture of blood vessels in the head.

But they base their main charge on the belief that if boxing can do intense brain damage in a few cases, it must do less obvious, but still serious, injury in hundreds of others. The weight of this charge depends on the controversial question of whether "punch-drunkness" is really as common as some doctors claim.

Aggressive

One group of U.S. scientists who studied the brainwave records of more than 1,000 professional boxers reported no difference between the brains of much-punched men and normal brains.

Other investigators reported a disturbingly high proportion of abnormal brain-wave recordings.

In some cases it was found that boxers whose sense of judgment seemed to have been impaired by slight brain injury became more aggressive in the ring, thereby increasing their risk of further damage.

There is no doubt that the knock-out produces temporary injury to the brain. Tests have shown that a floored boxer's head can strike the ring mat with a force equal to a 10lb weight dropping 8ft.

Records

The chief indisputable fact on the Lancet's side is that whereas the body can repair most injured tissues, there is no means of regenerating damaged brain cells.

There are many case records, well documented, in which the cumulative effect of head punches seems to have resulted in progressive loss of mental capacity.

Thus a 26-year-old miner began to show mild signs of mental deterioration after fighting his way to the cruiser-weight championship of his area. Then after he had been beaten so badly that a fight had to be stepped in the fourth round, he became quarrelsome. He began to complain of headaches and delusions about his wife, finally threatening to kill her with a carving knife.

Nevertheless boxing is well down the list of sports as a cause of injury. In a survey made at last year's British Empire and Commonwealth Games at Cardiff, Dr Kenneth Lloyd found that boxing was less hazardous than athletics.

Penalties

What has the boxing industry done to counter the charge that since boxing results in deliberate injury and occasionally in death, it should be classed as a blood sport?

Firstly referees have been told that if they allow a professional boxer to be punched when he is no longer capable of defending himself, they will be heavily penalised by the Boxing Board of Control.

Boxers may no longer use drastic measures which might weaken them for getting their weight down.

Every boxer who is knocked out must undergo a medical test before he can fight again. Strong smelling salts, ear-rubbing, and other traditional methods used by seconds to bring round dazed boxers are now forbidden.

Mr Teddy Waltham, general secretary of the British Boxing Board of Control, pointed out recently that since hundreds of distinguished doctors give their services to boxing it cannot be so dangerous—a point endorsed by boxing promoter Jack Solomons.

After a thorough survey, Dr Joseph Blomstein concluded that British amateur boxing is "a useful and justifiable sport." There have been only five deaths from boxing in Britain since 1946.

'Freedom'

Boxing is a big-money industry and the fans—accused by the Lancet of having "an unhealthy appetite" for violence and bloodshed—will resent any move to make it illegal as an interference with individual freedom.

But however the fans may howl, the Lancet's outburst today shows that there is a growing body of influential doctors dedicated to procuring a complete ban on what they call "the ignoble art."

INDIANS WITHIN REACH OF FIRST WIN OVER A COUNTY SIDE

Northampton, June 15. The Indian tourists have a fine chance of gaining their first win over a county this season here tomorrow, before they meet England in the second Test match at Lord's on Thursday.

The tourists built up a total of 428 for six wickets against Northamptonshire before declaring with a lead of 217 which had been reduced by 42 at the close by the county's opening pair Dennis Brookes and Peter Arnold.

The Backbone

Polly Umrigar provided the backbone to the Indians' big score. He hit 202 not out, his third double century of the summer, and at 124 he became the first Indian to reach 1,000 runs this tour.

It was a resolute effort taking seven hours 35 minutes and including 73 singles and only 19 boundaries.

Umrigar's fine knock varied in tempo. While sharing a third wicket stand of 104 with Vijay Manjrekar he was ready to attack the bowling. But when putting on 113 with Roy for the fourth wicket he was mainly defensive.

Both Manjrekar and Roy reached fifties, with the former the more enterprising. Useful knocks came later in the innings from three candidates for a Test place—Ghorpade, Kripal Singh and Jalimha.

Attractive

Ghorpade was the most attractive stay and he received a big cheer after hitting seven fours in his 37 scored in 55 minutes.

The Northamptonshire attack which for a time lacked pace-man Frank Tyson because of a farred ankle was undistinguished. The Australian spinner, George Tribe, was punished for 115 in 30 overs and did not bowl a maiden. His only wicket was taken with his first delivery.

Scores

Scores at close of play today were:

Northampton: 211 (Lightfoot 84, Guple four for 84), and 42 for no wicket.
Indians: 428 for six wickets declared (Umrigar 202 not out, Manjrekar 55, Roy 53, Ghorpade 37, Scott two for 68, Tyson one for 40, Tribe one for 115). —Reuters.

From the Files
25 years AGO

For over 25 years, Hongkong had known Mr Peter Grant, Assistant Superintendent of Police as a confirmed bachelor, and his engagement, whilst on home leave last year came as a surprise to his very many friends in the Colony.

His bride Miss Joyce Dobbin arrived last Wednesday and the wedding took place quietly on Saturday morning at the Registrar's Office in the Supreme Court. The bridegroom has been connected with the Police Force since 1900.

FOR many years before his retirement on the staff of the Hongkong and Shanghai Hotels Ltd., Mr Ramasamy Soondaram, a highly respected member of the Indian community has passed away. He was 72. He was educated at the old Government Central School under the headmastership of the late Dr Frederick Stewart.

The death occurred suddenly yesterday morning at Airtel Hotel, Kowloon of Mr J. de Heer Moore, for many years with the Asiatic Petroleum Co (S.S.) Ltd in Hongkong.

Miss Marion M. Baker was married to Mr James Loughborough on board the Dollar as President Hoover at Shanghai on the spur of the moment when seeing friends off home on leave. The newly married couple did not leave in that vessel but returned to Shanghai in the last tender.

The marriage was performed in the cabin of Mrs C. M. Campbell whom the affianced couple had gone to bid "Bon voyage" on their journey to the U.S. To add to the happy chance of the occasion, Mr George A. Fitch, secretary of the Foreign YMCA, who with Mrs Fitch is going to the U.S. on leave in the Hoover, performed the ceremony while Mr Walter McCann acted in the capacity of best man.

WITH the deluge of ten and a half inches of rain which swept Hongkong on Thursday and until 3 p.m. yesterday, the Colony had its first taste of monsoonal weather this year. A phenomenal heavy rainfall was registered early yesterday morning, 8.03 inches falling between 12 a.m. and 3 p.m. Happy Valley was converted into a vast lake. A European residence at Shek O was struck by lightning during yesterday morning's severe thunderstorm. This was the home of Mr and Mrs M. H. Turner of Messrs Deacons, the solicitors. There was no serious damage apart from the breaking of panes of glass.

Latest Condition Of Colony Roads

The state of Hongkong roads this morning is as follows:

Kennedy Road is closed to traffic just above the Government Clinic by a washout, leaving only half the road. Single lane light traffic is possible when the weather improves. Pokfulam Road is closed to normal traffic below the waterworks filter beds near the Ho Tung Workshops because of danger from earth and rocks above the road. Ambulances and essential traffic are being allowed through. If the weather improves, single-lane traffic is possible today. There is a small washout below Pokfulam Road above the University playing field, and the road is restricted to single lane traffic. There is a serious washout close to the Pokfulam Police Station. Only light vehicles may pass on the remaining half of the road. Temporary repairs are being carried out and traffic is restricted to single lane. Victoria Road is blocked by landslides in numerous places along its whole length. Bulldozers cleared Sassoon Road last night and access to that part of Victoria Road is now possible. A bulldozer is working in Victoria Road to clear it to provide an alternative route to Pokfulam Road but clearance work will take some time. The road block in Island Road near its junction with Pokfulam Road was cleared by bulldozers early this morning. The roadway is now open to traffic but is restricted to a single lane at several places between Stanley and Shaukiwan owing to landslides. Repulse Bay Road is open to traffic, but is restricted to a single lane in one or two places.

KOWLOON & NEW TERRITORIES

On the Tai Po Road, the washout at Milestone 3, below the Carillon Hotel still restricts traffic flow to one carriageway. Tai Po Road is washed out at the 6 Milestone, 6 1/2 Milestone and 6 3/4 Milestone. Work of filling the gap at the 6 Milestone is proceeding. There is a landslide blocking the road at the 11 Milestone. Shatin is therefore cut off from both sides by road. Castle Peak Road is open to traffic, but traffic flow is restricted to single lane at a number of places, particularly at the 15 Milestone and at the 19 1/2 Milestone. Clear Water Bay Road is now open to traffic. Kowloon Highway is still blocked near its junction with Clear Water Bay Road. The obstruction is expected to be cleared tomorrow morning. Clearance of roads affected by floods, landslides and other causes is proceeding rapidly. Road surfaces have been damaged in many places by landslides and it will be some time before they will be back to normal, a Government spokesman stated today.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Reply To 'Jojo'

Sir, With reference to the letter by Jojo Gutz in Saturday's paper, I desire to make the following comments:—Racing conditions are now entirely different to what took place during my early days in Hongkong, up to and including 1920. The Hongkong Jockey Club only had one race meeting of four days at the end of February and/or early March. Thereafter most of the race ponies returned to Shanghai, etc. Hongkong was then left with a considerable number of Chinese ponies and some 40 Ponies of the Mounted Troop—and these supplied the fields for events organized by the Gymkhana Club for five or six meetings during the summer months.

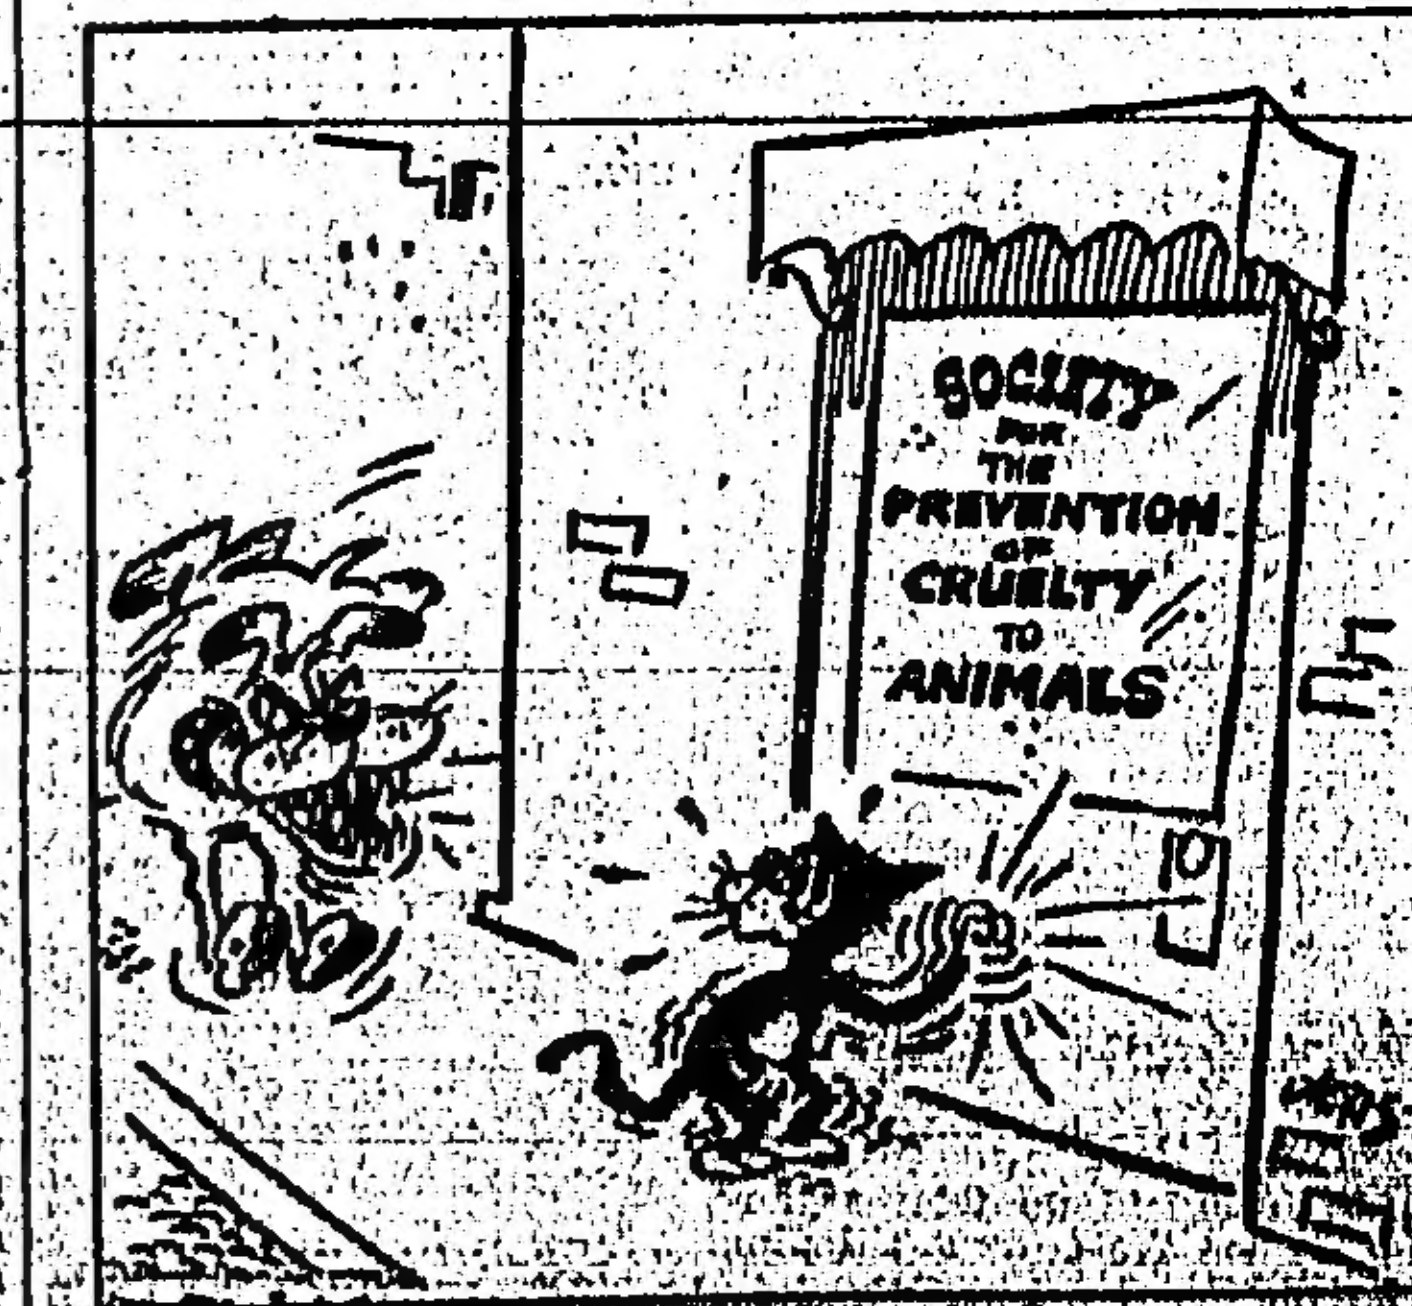

Now the Hongkong Jockey Club has frequent meetings from this first Saturday in October to Wai Lam, at the end of May—giving us anything from 23 to 26 days of racing. It is thus manifestly impossible to stage Gymkhana meetings on our grass track during the summer months for a certain amount of returning has to be done and the whole course top-dressed with black earth and given every possible chance to recover and be in good order by October 3.

I was not in Hongkong in 1912—being then stationed partly in Kuala Lumpur and partly in Singapore, thus I could not possibly have ridden in the Circus Race, as mentioned by Jojo Gutz.

Textile Executive Leaves

Mr S. J. L. Hattersby, an executive of the Calico Printers' Association of Manchester, one of the largest textile manufacturers of the world, leaves today for Singapore, Burma and India. He has been here in Hongkong to promote the sales of a new furnishing fabric which, it is claimed, will not stretch or shrink and the colours will not run.
